Application Link: <https://apply.iie.org/ffsp2021>

Applications open on January 01, 2020 and will close on June 1, 2020. Please read this information carefully before starting your application. Prior to submission, open applications can be saved and updated as information (such as transcripts or certificates) become available.

Eligibility

Be a South Sudanese citizen. (Please note: South Sudanese nationals with dual citizenship from the U.S. are not eligible for the program)

Have one of the following academic degrees:

- For non-degree PhD research (Visiting Student Researcher): Be currently enrolled in a PhD program in South Sudan. If enrolled in a PhD program outside South Sudan, he/she must be a member of a faculty in any of the accredited universities in South Sudan.

All Applicants should:

- Citizen of South Sudan (South Sudanese nationals with dual citizenship from the U.S. are not eligible for the program)
- Fluent in English.
- Currently enrolled in a PhD program in South Sudan. If enrolled in a PhD program outside South Sudan, he/she must be a member of a faculty in any of the accredited universities in South Sudan.
- Must detail their intended research area and be prepared to submit a writing sample.
- Have high motivation and serious commitment to completing the program within a specific time-frame and to returning home.
- Be able to meet the minimum scores on required standardized tests such as the GRE and TOEFL (tested after screening and interviews.)
- Display a sense of social responsibility; be involved in extra-mural activities
- Have a desire to further Fulbright Alumni activities by giving back to your community/university upon returning
- Have an understanding of the cross-cultural sensitivity and flexibility needed to adjust successfully to life in the United States as a student.

Preference will be given to applicants who:

- Have not had recent and extensive experience in the U.S.
- Have not held a Fulbright Scholarship before

Selection Process and Timeline

- After the initial review of all the applications by the Fulbright Selection Committee, potential candidates will participate in a selection process before a final cohort is nominated and submitted to the Fulbright Foreign Services Board for further review.
- A nomination by the Selection Committee does not guarantee your placement at a U.S. university. Final placement at a U.S. university will be determined by the Institute of International Education (IIE).
- Final nominees, successfully placed at a U.S. university, will depart for the United States in July/August 2021.
- Shortlisted candidates will be contacted for interviews by early June, 2020.

APPLICATION GUIDELINES

Academic Materials

Upload copies of ALL post-high school transcripts. An uploaded transcript has to include 3 components:

- Your transcript/s
- Your graduation certificate/s
- An explanation sheet on the grading system used by your university (usually found at the back of your transcripts)

Please note: All 3 components have to be uploaded for each degree completed to date. Scan your transcripts, certificates and explanation sheet into one file before you upload them to the application system. Final selected applicants will be asked to hand in an original transcript and a certified copy of the certificate for each degree completed. These documents will be sent to the U.S. universities for verification of completion of the degrees.

- Transcripts and certificates must be in English

- Upload as .pdf files using the file naming protocol
Surname_Firstname_Document type (e.g. Smith_Susan_Transcript BSc) is preferable.

Test Scores

GRE and TOEFL test scores are not required at this stage. If you have completed any of the required tests on your own before applying, you may upload with your application.

Study Plan

For which degree objective are you applying:

- Visiting Student Researcher: South Sudan PhD student going to the U.S. to do research (no coursework). Intended grant period is 9 months

Study/Research Objectives:

This is an extremely important part of your application. It is the essence of why you want to study in the United States. They must be clearly written and outline the following:

- Be specific about your major field and specialized interests within this field.
- Explain why you are interested in this area.
- Describe the kind of program you expect to undertake
 - How does this fit into your educational background?
 - How does this fit into your future objectives and goals?
- How are your research interests relevant to current trends/challenges in your home country?
- How will you apply your studies upon returning to your home country?
- Institutions in the U.S. to which you are applying or intend to conduct research.
- Reason the academic objective should be achieved in the U.S.
- How study in the U.S. will enhance your knowledge, skills and understanding in your field of study and future career goals.

TIP: First formulate in a word document then upload to the application.

Personal Statement:

This is a narrative statement describing how you have achieved your current goals. It is an opportunity to ‘interview on paper’. What you do not tell us about yourself, we will never know. Promote your accomplishments but be concise.

The most important part of any university or scholarship application is the personal statement. A strong personal statement can set you apart from other applicants and give you a chance to explain how you meet the selection criteria.

Faculty members and scholarship selection committees want to know as much as they can about each applicant. Admissions exam scores, university degree results and letters of reference are all important indicators of an applicant’s academic potential. However, this information does not reveal much about the student’s character, motivation, future academic or career goals or why the applicant is interested in that particular university or field. The personal statement exists to allow applicants to convey something personal about themselves, and to convince the selection committee that the applicant is an especially attractive candidate.

Guidelines on writing a Personal Statement for Fulbright applications:

- Our best tip is for you to stop and think before you put pen to paper – do you know what your short and longer-term goals are? Are you yourself convinced that this program will help you fulfil these? It will be hard to convince a university if you don’t believe so yourself! Have you done enough research into selecting suitable university programs? Or researching the particular scholarship program? Are you convinced they are a good fit for you? Do you know what the admissions or selection criteria are? Is your CV updated?
- After you have all of this necessary information for writing a personal statement, we encourage you to have a rigorous brainstorming session. Think about your personal statement as a marketing tool. You want to convey all of your strengths, as they relate to the prompt provided and/or the selection criteria. We recommend making a list of the criteria and assigning 1-2 examples of how you have demonstrated these. Think of these as your talking points. Like a politician, no matter what you are asked in the personal statement or essay prompts you will try to address these in your application package. Cross off those that will be covered in other areas of your application. Arrange them into three themes: why me, why here and why now:

- Why me: Connect the dots between your CV and transcript. What relevant preparation and experience (academic, extracurricular or work) do you bring to the program? Don't just describe what you have done. Go beyond and talk about what you gained from these experiences and how this will make you an ideal student for the program.
 - Why here: Describe your academic fit with the university or for a scholarship program, your connection with their mission. Is there a particular concentration or faculty member you're excited about? If there is not a separate research statement, talk in detail about your plans for research or your intended coursework.
 - Why now: What are your short/long-term goals? How does doing this program, at this time, at this university help you fulfil these? And what will you do with this degree or participation in this scholarship program?
- Now you know what you want to say, consider how you will say it. Keep in mind that the personal statement is a creative writing piece. You will also want to have an introduction, conclusion, and theme connecting your points. Have a look at some online sample personal statements in your field to get a sense of the typical style.
 - Write an introduction: You will notice many students start with a personal anecdote or quotation that illustrates their motivation for studying their degree. This shows the reader a bit more about yourself, and can create a theme connecting paragraphs.
 - Write a conclusion: Be sure to wrap up your personal statement. What is the main message the reader should take away? Can you connect this back to the theme you introduced in the first paragraph? Try to end on a powerful and positive note.

Other important rules of thumb to keep in mind when composing your personal statement include:

- Address the personal statement specifications fully
- Use clear, concise language – say what you mean
- Avoid vague or empty statements, clichés and cultural references that may not translate well to a U.S. audience
- When you re-use a personal statement, be careful to submit the correct personal statement to the correct university and double-check that all references within the text are to the correct university
- Proofread your work and ask several individuals to proofread your personal statement and offer their feedback (grammar and spelling mistakes will reflect poorly upon your level of effort)
- Avoid too much overlap with other sections of your application package
- Address any gaps or weaknesses in your application or academic performance – turn them into a positive if you can

TIP: First formulate in a word document then upload to the application.

Recommendations

Three reference letters are required. The reference letter is an extremely important part of your application. It gives the selection committee further insight into getting to know you through the eyes of your professor or employer and plays a big part in the final selection of a candidate.

Reference letters are confidential. Therefore, all applicants must register their recommenders so that their recommenders can receive and return the reference via the online system. You will need the name, title and email address of your three referees.

Choose referees who know you well, and whom you have studied or worked with.

We include guidance on writing a compelling reference at the end of this guide. Diplomatically hand this guide document to your referee with a list of some of your achievements, transcripts, etc. to help jog their memory.

TIP: Identify your referees before you start filling out the application form so that they have enough time to submit their reference before the deadline.

Additional Documents

- Use this section to upload your “Interview Location Page” found at the end of this document.
- If you are applying for a PhD program, please upload a writing sample of approximately 10-14 pages, i.e. a section from an article or paper you’ve already written.
- CV
- Be sure to complete the Outreach Survey.
